The Legislature.

Fully 400 of the bills introduced in the Kentucky House at this session are dead because of non-action.

Representative Rigdon's bill to require hucksters to pay a license was tabled in the House at Frankfort.

The Kentucky Senate Friday passed the bill prohibiting the co-education of the races in the State, and it is now ready to be signed by the Governor.

There was no better or more important bill passed by the present Legislature than the one imposing a death penalty or life imprisonment upon burglars who wound or attempt to wound inmates of the house broken into.

The Alverson House bill providing for the punishment of vagrants was taken up and discussed in the Senate and passed unanimously, as was the House bill providing for a truant officer in cities of the first, second, third and fourth classes. The duty of the officer is to require children between the ages of seven and fourteen to attend school.

The Senate passed the House bill to change the name of Kentucky lunatic asylums to "hospitals." The bill will probably be signed by the Governor.

The House bill, providing for the separate management of colored and white graded schools in cities of the fourth class passed the Senate.

The Legislature will adjourn to-day, after one of the most successful and business-like sessions in the history of the State. A rough estimate of the amount of money appropriated for different purposes during the present session places the figures at $1,500,000.

CARPETS.—I don't want you to guess what your carpets will look like by asking you to select your patterns from little samples. Come in and I will match up the carpets and you can see what your room will look like. All the new effects. J. T. HINTON.

YOU'RE RIGHT.—A correspondent in the Cynthiana Democrat, says: When you see five or six starved dogs at one house, and a coon skin tacked up against the smoke house, you will usually see the children with the toes of their shoes out and the corn crib empty. For goodness sake let us have a dog law.
